this is a comprehensive 1997 account of the history of literary criticism in Britain and Europe between 1660 and 1800 unlike previous histories it is not just a chronological survey of critical writing but a multidisciplinary investigation of how the understanding of literature and its various genres was transformed at the start of the modern era by developments in philosophy psychology the natural sciences linguistics and other disciplines as well as in society at large in the process modern literary theory at first often implicit in literary texts themselves emancipated itself from classical poetics and rhetoric and literary criticism emerged as a full time professional activity catering for an expanding literate public the volume is international both in coverage and in authorship extensive bibliographies provide guidance for further specialised study this 1999 volume was the first to explore as part of an unbroken continuum the critical legacy both of the humanist rediscovery of ancient learning and of its neoclassical reformulation focused on what is arguably the most complex phase in the transmission of the western literary critical heritage the book encompasses those issues that helped shape the way european writers thought about literature from the late middle ages to the late seventeenth century these issues touched almost every facet of western intellectual endeavour as well as the historical cultural social scientific and technological contexts in which that activity evolved from the interpretative reassessment of the major ancient poetic texts this volume addresses the emergence of the literary critic in europe by exploring poetics prose fiction contexts of criticism neoclassicism and national developments sixty one chapters by internationally respected scholars are supported by an introduction detailed bibliographies for further investigation and a full index the history of the most hotly debated areas of literary theory including structuralism and deconstruction leslie stephen was best known to his contemporaries as a literary critic essays on literature and literary figures dominate his two best known series of books hours in a library and studies of a biographer but in an array of essays on general literary topics most of which have remained uncollected until this volume stephen discusses the broad outlines of his view of the art and craft of literature he addresses the notion that authors write too much the purpose of criticism the relation between art and morality and such topics as humor autobiography and the interrelation of science and romance in these bracing essays stephen brings his characteristic clarity of thought pungency of expression and keen insight into literature from both an aesthetic and sociopolitical perspective the result is a series of essays written over more than thirty years that vividly capture the state of literature and criticism in the waning years of the victorian age in england
